News Digest.
Considerable excitement was created in New York on Monday, by the announcement that the President-elect, Mr. McKinley, had been elected to the office of President of the United States.

The Chicago Convention.
Who will be nominated? is the question. For our own part we have great doubts as to whether Mr. McKinley will be elected.

LETTERS FROM A PEDESTRIAN.

NUMBER TWO.

Travels through Iowa and Country.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

COLUMBUS, May 11, 1880.

Messrs. Editors:—Leaving Portage City by the plank-road, the attention of the traveler is attracted by a cluster of buildings on an eminence overlooking the Fox river.

The bridge of the Mill & Min. R. over the river is directly in front, and a grove of young timber occupies the background. This is the renowned Fort Winnebago, an institution the figure of which, with its early history of the State, and which, with its disciplined soldiers, often drew the red man to obedience than compelled him to submit to bloody battles. The fort still looks well at a distance, but is going very fast to ruin. The large plank fence that surrounded it is taken away, and two or three of the officers houses were burned down, I think in 1856. The arsenal and magazine still preserve their identity, but are going to pieces along with the other buildings. Some few Irish or German families live in the best of the rooms, and the others are unoccupied except it may be by improvised for housekeeping or for storage. It seems to me that the fort is fast going to ruin, and that the only way to save it is to demolish it, and build a new one on a more elevated site, and with more modern appliances. It is a pity that the State should have allowed it to fall into such a state of disrepair. It is a pity that the State should have allowed it to fall into such a state of disrepair. It is a pity that the view of a cultivated prairie. I have wished to see the prairie through the lens of a camera, and to express its beauty in words. When a dull, dreary fog came down upon the prairie, and the sun was hidden, and the prairie was a mass of gray, and the prairie
